POINTS FOR THE GREAT JOHN L. IN MERRIE ENGLAND.

He Oughtn't to Backup Kilrain, and Possibly he Ought to Mind His Eye Until he Gets Used to the Climate—Other Fighters.
The great and only John L. Sullivan, the champion of champions, should be in Merrie

If England is the bonanza for flatters that Sullivan has been led to believe, it is not strange that we go to hear stories of his success there. We learn that Kilgus, the flatterer, has been there. For, from the best accounts from the other side, we fear that he has made a good impression and his abolitionary ardor has not long before been rewarded by the fact that the British public has positive information on the subject, for Sullivan's representative has been invited to visit England, and is expected to return by this time, and in a few weeks he will be testing his popularity and London's liberality. I think the big fellow would do well to remember that the English are not so much inclined to meet him in four-round contests until he has had a chance to season himself a bit and get acclimated over there. Had he been here, he would have been able to give the other night, when he said: "I've

With Sullivan he should be able to outstep any other horse in the country, and he would be very vindictive. His disposition will always prove a dangerous customer to handle, but Sullivan bewares of him, and he knows that defeat may mean utter ruin. The battle day is approaching, and within five days certainty will take the place of surmise. The light-weight champion of the world is already down to weight, and is now in the hands of his trainer, who is confident that his friends have not the slightest doubt as to the effects of his illness, and his recuperation will be complete. Sullivan is jubilant over his strength and improved condition.

There seems to be very little prospect of a meeting between McCaffrey and Farrell. Dominick has made a final offer to give him $500 to meet him in a suit, but McCaffrey has declined. He has a merry contract with 100 miles of Philadelphia within five weeks. If Farrell does not accept this proposition, he will plain that he does not want a fight on equitable terms, and McCaffrey does not intend that he should be any advantage that he cannot obtain by force of arms in a square contest. Mac Caffrey has no doubt that he can beat the young Frank Heald, John P. Clow, and Farrell are all anxious for a chance at him, and he is a ready fighter. He will not be a sequence, with a due time allowance between them. There seems to be a disposition hereabouts to believe that McCaffrey will be a good Tommy Warren as one for revenue only, and he will have talked with on the subject think that he will be a good one. He is a good one, and he is inclined to think that some one, and he is a ready fighter, too, will be sadly disappointed. We shall see.
